

Rockrose Locks $404M Freddie Mac Loan at 666 Greenwich as Agency Liquidity Floods Multifamily

$404 million

Debt / financing

On a Monday in late spring, Henry Elghanayan closed a $404 million loan from PNC Bank on the Archive at 666 Greenwich Street. Freddie Mac will purchase the paper. The deal refinances existing debt on the 479-unit luxury rental in the West Village.

Inside the $404 million financing

$404 million

Debt / financing

$844,000,

Transaction value

$18.2 million

Debt / financing

Henry Elghanayan closed a $404 million loan from PNC Bank on the Archive

On a Monday in late spring, Henry Elghanayan closed a $404 million loan from PNC Bank on the Archive at 666 Greenwich Street. Freddie Mac will purchase the paper. The deal refinances existing debt on the 479-unit luxury rental in the West Village.

Elghanayan is the founding principal of Rockrose Development, a New York family office

Elghanayan is the founding principal of Rockrose Development, a New York family office that has held a 99-year lease on the landmarked Romanesque Revival building since 1985. The property was originally built in 1892 for federal customs operations and converted to apartments under a partnership with the New York State Urban Development Corporation.

Its 80,000 square feet of retail includes a D'Agostino supermarket

The Archive spans a full block bounded by Greenwich, Washington, Christopher and Barrow streets. Its 80,000 square feet of retail includes a D'Agostino supermarket. In 2024, high-end fitness operator Continuum signed a 25,000-square-foot lease through September 2032, taking the main and lower levels.

Their involvement signals a clean, execution-ready deal

Avison Young's team of Scott Singer, Andy Singer and Kevin Swartz arranged the debt. The Singers are among the most active multifamily debt brokers in New York, consistently placing agency paper on stabilized assets. Their involvement signals a clean, execution-ready deal.

Freddie Mac's purchase of the loan confirms

Freddie Mac's purchase of the loan confirms that agency appetite for New York City multifamily remains robust. The agency has been the dominant source of fixed-rate, long-term financing for the sector since the regional bank pullback in 2023. PNC originated the loan, likely warehousing it before the agency takeout.

At a 4.5% cap rate, the property would generate approximately $18.2 million in net

The $404 million figure implies a per-unit value of roughly $844,000, consistent with West Village luxury rental comps. At a 4.5% cap rate, the property would generate approximately $18.2 million in net operating income, supporting a debt service coverage ratio above 1.25x on a 30-year amortizing loan at current agency spreads.

Earlier this year, the firm closed a $100 million purchase of a Brooklyn city block

Rockrose has been active on the acquisition side as well. Earlier this year, the firm closed a $100 million purchase of a Brooklyn city block, followed by a $65 million acquisition of a neighboring Cobble Hill parcel that had been the site of stalled development plans. Both sites were formerly part of the Long Island College Hospital campus.

The 666 Greenwich refinancing is a textbook agency execution: a stabilized, landmarked

The 666 Greenwich refinancing is a textbook agency execution: a stabilized, landmarked, tax-exempt luxury rental with strong in-place cash flow and a blue-chip sponsor. It tells us less about market distress and more about the continued bifurcation between institutional-quality multifamily and everything else.

Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae remain the only consistent sources of 10-year fixed-rate debt

What the deal does reveal is the depth of agency liquidity for New York City multifamily. Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae remain the only consistent sources of 10-year fixed-rate debt at sub-6% all-in costs. Regional banks are still sidelined. Life companies are selective. The agencies are the market.

The Brooklyn hospital site acquisitions fit that pattern

For sponsors like Rockrose, the calculus is straightforward: lock long-term agency debt on stabilized assets, harvest the tax exemption, and recycle equity into value-add or development plays. The Brooklyn hospital site acquisitions fit that pattern.

Why it matters

For lenders and investors watching the multifamily space, the takeaway is this: agency capital is not retreating.

LIGHT TOWER GROUP