What happened

On May 28, 2026, Tanger closed on a $60 million acquisition of The Town Center at Levis Commons, a 300,000-square-foot mixed-use development in Perrysburg, Ohio. The seller: Hill Partners, the Charlotte-based developer that had owned and managed the property since its 2004 opening.

The money

The price works out to $200 per square foot for a center that includes 60-plus retailers, a Cinemark theater, and 69,000 square feet of office space. Tenants include Sephora, Shake Shack, Anthropologie, lululemon, J. Crew Factory, Athleta, and Arhaus.

The money

Tanger is a publicly traded REIT with a market cap of approximately $3.5 billion. The company has been repositioning its portfolio toward higher-quality open-air assets, shedding lower-tier enclosed malls and adding lifestyle and mixed-use properties.

The transaction

This acquisition fits that strategy. Levis Commons is the retail anchor of a 400-acre master-planned community, J. Preston Levis Commons, giving it a built-in demographic base of affluent households in the Toledo suburbs.

The money

The $200 per square foot price is below replacement cost for similar mixed-use product in the Midwest. Construction costs for comparable centers now run $350 to $450 per square foot, per recent data from Rider Levett Bucknall.

The money

Hill Partners had owned the asset for 22 years. The firm developed the project from raw land, leasing it up through multiple cycles. Selling now captures a premium relative to pre-pandemic valuations while avoiding the capital expenditure required for aging infrastructure and tenant improvements.

The story

For Tanger, the deal adds a stabilized cash-flowing asset with a weighted average lease term of approximately 5.5 years, based on typical lease structures in similar centers. The office component provides additional income diversification, though office vacancy in the Toledo MSA has risen to 12.4% per CBRE data.

The transaction

The transaction reflects a broader trend: institutional capital rotating into dominant open-air retail assets while exiting Class B and C malls. REITs like Tanger, Simon Property Group, and Kimco Realty have been net buyers of high-quality outdoor centers since 2023.

The people behind it

Private capital, particularly family offices and regional developers, has been the primary seller. Hill Partners fits that profile. The firm is not a public REIT and faces no quarterly earnings pressure, but the decision to sell now suggests a view that retail cap rates have compressed to near-cycle lows.

The final read

Cap rates for top-tier open-air centers in the Midwest have tightened to 6.5% to 7.0%, per Real Capital Analytics. At a $60 million price and estimated net operating income of $4.2 million, Levis Commons trades at a 7.0% cap rate, in line with that range.

The real story is what happens next.

The headline is the transaction. The story is the structure.

If the capital stack works, the deal becomes a signal. If it does not, it becomes a warning.
